APPENDIX A – Frequently Asked Questions

Is homework compulsory?

The completion of homework is non-compulsory. If there is a specific reason your child cannot complete a task let the teacher who set the homework know via email or by writing a note. If you would like your child not to receive homework, please advise the classroom teacher in writing.

My child's homework is too hard or too easy for them.

Homework should not introduce new concepts. Some homework tasks can be completed independently, and some requires supervision or assistance. If your child is experiencing anxiety or stress from completing homework, speak to your classroom teacher to discuss.

Can I have homework over the school holidays?

Teachers provide homework during the school term only. Over the holiday period children can continue to read and complete Mathematics tasks if they choose to.

Can the teacher provide work to complete on a family holiday during the term?

Family vacations during the school term are considered unauthorised absences by the Department of Education. Families going overseas should not take school resources such as library or reading books with them.

Will my child be assessed on their homework tasks?

Homework is not assessed by the teacher in a formal manner. A teacher may look at completed tasks and acknowledge that they have been attempted. Teachers will provide informal feedback to the students for completed tasks.
